FINANCIAL CRISIS

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the discussion late last night and many days before, and perhaps tonight and beyond, is about the financial crisis that is described in this country by the Treasury Secretary and the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. They have been indicating to us most of this year that we have a strong economy in this country and indicated that there have been some problems with toxic mortgage-backed securities that have gone sour and so they have dealt with them in a number of ways, but still indicated that the economy is essentially strong and the fundamentals are all right.

But in recent weeks, especially, step after step taken by the Treasury Secretary and the Federal Reserve Board is to commit American taxpayers' dollars to try to remedy some very serious problems in the economy. The discussion these days—especially in the last few days—has been about a proposal by the President and his Secretary of the Treasury for $700 billion as a rescue fund for the economy. What most people are not talking about is the fact that we have already committed $1 trillion for this purpose before the Congress would vote on $700 billion more. Let me describe why.

When Bear Stearns went belly up, the Federal Reserve Board provided $29 billion to buy Bear Stearns to J.P. Morgan, so that was taxpayer money. That is our guarantee: $300 billion through the Fed window direct lending to investment banks. For the first time in the history of this country, the Federal Reserve Board opened its lending window to nonregulated, unregulated banks. So investment banks go to the Fed: $300 billion.

Fannie and Freddie. We assumed the liability of Fannie and Freddie. That is $200 billion.

When Lehman went belly up, the funding was provided by the taxpayers for J.P. Morgan to buy Lehman Brothers: $87 billion. American International Group: $85 billion. Propping up money market funds: $50 billion.

That is $1.7 trillion in total, $700 billion of which is before this Congress as a proposition by the President for a rescue fund.

Now, the reason I wanted to visit about this today is it seems to me this is a proposition—if you equate it to a bathtub—of suggesting that we put water in the bathtub before we plug in the drain, you are not going to fill the bathtub. You are just going to put water in the top and it is going to drain out the bottom.

This morning I woke up, as did most Americans, to discover one of America's largest banks had failed and had been purchased by an investment bank overnight. The purchase was arranged by the Federal Reserve Board. So I was curious about this: Washington Mutual, one of America's largest banks. I went back to take a look to see what the president of Washington Mutual earned last year. Obviously, the bank was headed, apparently, toward a crash landing someplace. Well, Mr. Kerry Killinger, the president of Washington Mutual, which was bought last evening by J.P. Morgan, earned $14 million in compensation last year. Fourteen million dollars was paid—to the CEO of a company that last night we were told was going belly up—with insured deposits, so our Government arranged a purchase by an investment bank called J.P. Morgan.

Now, there is another piece to the story. Washington Mutual, which failed last evening, not only paid its CEO $14 million last year; it hired a new chief executive officer weeks ago. By the way, the new chief executive officer 3 weeks ago signed with a bonus of $7 million. And we are told this morning that the new CEO, having been on the job 3 weeks for Washington Mutual, now purchased by J.P. Morgan, will keep—likely keep—the $7 million bonus signed 3 weeks ago, and 12 million additional dollars as a severance. Three weeks' work: $19 million.

Now, I was trying to figure out: Here are some folks at the top of the food chain on these big companies, how
